

The FCC's prime directive is to protect the consumer and the consumer's interests. The FCC does not exist to give corporations more control of communications and the market. Your lifting of the "cross-ownership" ban shows the FCC's allegiance to companies and not to the consumer. The corporations will never take responsibility until they are forced to take responsibility. Speaking of responsibility, the FCC can take responsibility in this situation and do some good for the consumer and for America.